Three Years In, Modi Remains Very Popular

Broad public satisfaction with economy; declining support for U.S.

Indians' approval of Prime Minister Narendra Modi and their satisfaction with both their country's direction and the state of its economy have grown in recent years. Three years into Modi's five-year tenure, the honeymoon period for his administration may be over but the public's love affair with current conditions in India is even more intense.

Nearly nine-in-ten Indians hold a favorable opinion of Modi, comparable to their view of him in 2015, after a year in office. Roughly seven-in-ten say they have a very favorable view of the prime minister, again similar to public views in 2015.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

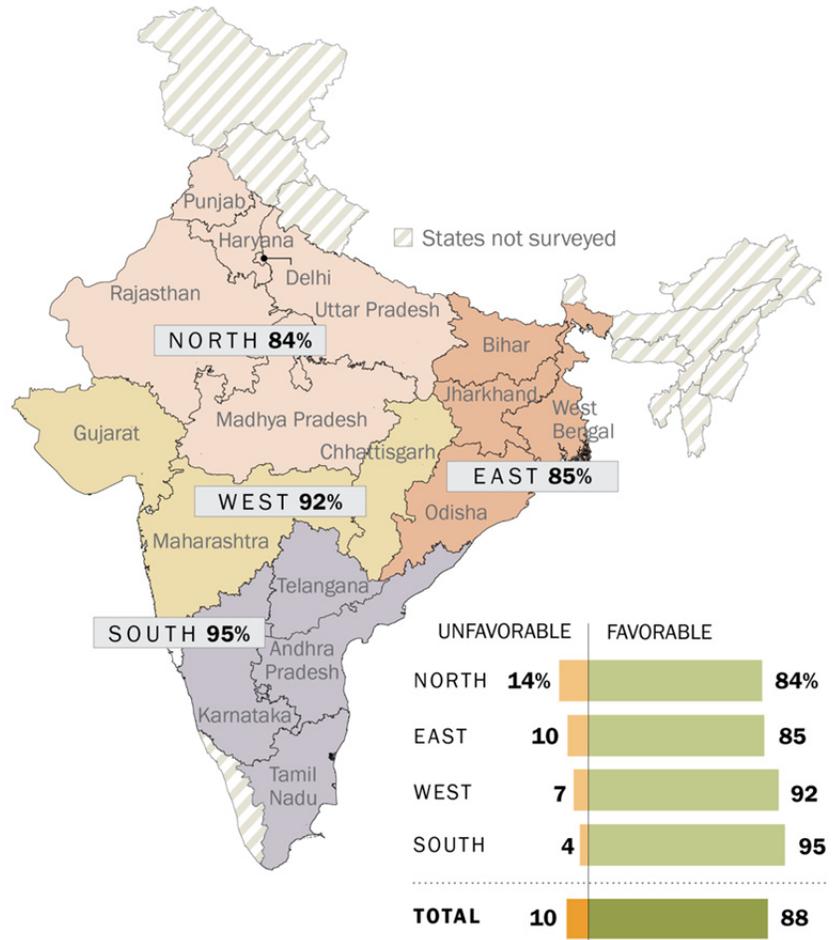

These are among the main findings of a Pew Research Center survey conducted among 2,464 respondents in India from Feb. 21 to March 10, 2017.

Modi's overwhelming popularity extends across India. At least nine-in-ten Indians in the southern states of Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Tamil Nadu and Telangana and in the western states of Maharashtra, Gujarat and Chhattisgarh hold a favorable view of the prime minister. The same is true for more than eight-in-ten in the eastern states of Bihar, Jharkhand, Odisha and West Bengal and the northern states of Delhi, Haryana, Madhya Pradesh, Punjab, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh.

Since 2015, Modi's popularity is relatively unchanged in the north, has risen in the west and the south and is down slightly in the east.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Modi remains by far the most popular national figure in Indian politics tested in the survey. His favorable rating is 31 percentage points higher than that of Sonia Gandhi, the leader of the Congress party, and is 30 points more than that for Rahul Gandhi, who led the Congress ticket in the last Lok Sabha election.

The public's positive assessment of Modi is buoyed by growing contentment with the Indian economy: More than eight-in-ten say economic conditions are good, up 19 percentage points since immediately before the 2014 election. And the share of adults who say the economy is very good (30%) has tripled in the past three years.

Overall, seven-in-ten Indians are now satisfied with the way things are going in the country. This positive assessment of India's direction has nearly doubled since 2014.

A partisan gap on Modi

Support for Prime Minister Modi is a partisan affair. Backers of Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) express stronger support for the prime minister than do backers of the rival Indian National Congress party (INC), as might be expected. The 2017 partisan gap in favorable approval of Modi is 32 percentage points, larger than the 20-point divide in 2015 but relatively unchanged from 2016.

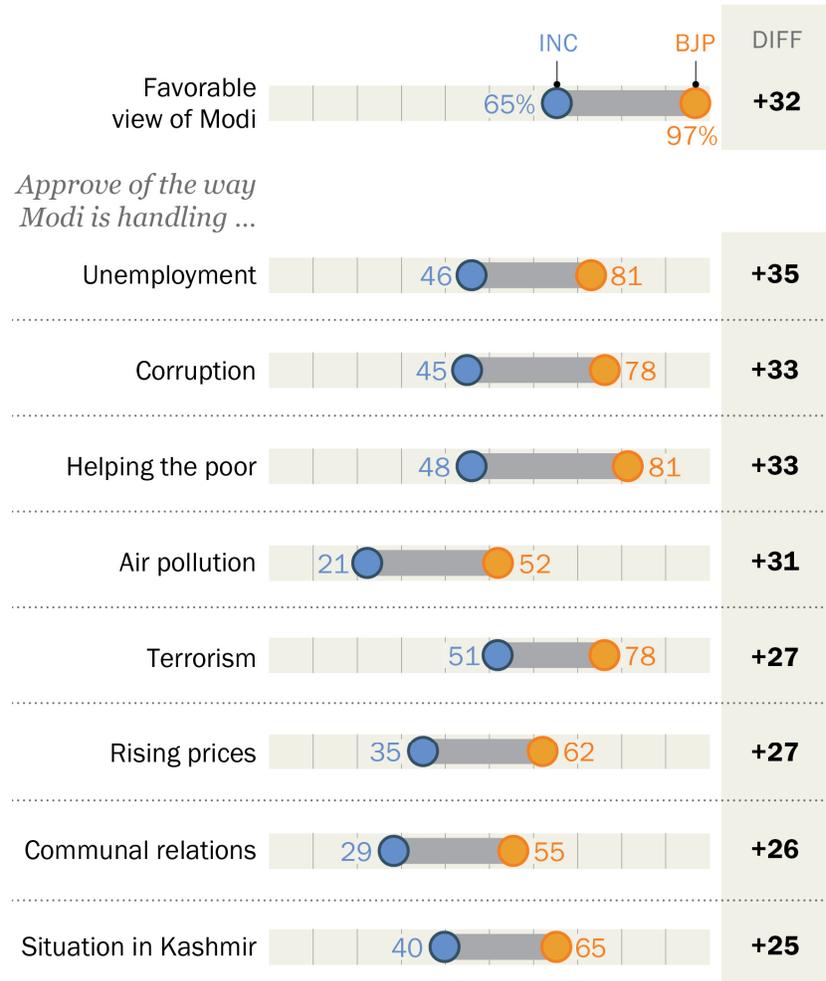

The prime minister's growing popularity can in part be traced to public satisfaction with his handling of domestic issues. At least seven-in-ten Indians approve of how he has helped the poor and handled unemployment, terrorism and corruption. Approval in these four areas is up 10 points or more since 2016.

Public assessment of his dealings with various challenges is quite partisan. On all eight of the issues surveyed, BJP adherents are more likely than Congress backers to approve of Modi's performance, by 25 points or more.

BJP supporters have a more positive opinion on the economy than Congress supporters. But both groups are similarly satisfied with the direction of the country, despite a partisan gap of 18 points in 2016.

The state of Indian governance and democracy

The Indian public, happy with its prime minister, believes the national government is doing the right thing for the country. More than eight-in-ten (85%) voice trust in the national government, including 39% who express a lot of trust. BJP supporters (90%) are more trusting of the government than Congress backers (76%).

The public is also quite satisfied (79%) with the way their democracy is currently working. This includes 33% who are very satisfied. Again, this is a partisan issue. BJP supporters (84%) are significantly more satisfied with Indian democracy than are Congress backers (65%).

India and the world

Many Indians do not express an opinion about international affairs. One-third or more of those surveyed express no opinion about other countries or Prime Minister Modi's handling of relations with prominent players on the world stage.

But, there are still some notable differences in opinion.

About half of Indian adults hold a favorable view of the United States, down 21 percentage points since 2015. Only 40% express confidence in President Donald Trump to do the right thing regarding world affairs, down 34 points from their faith in his predecessor, Barack Obama, in 2015. Both declines began in the last year of the Obama administration and continued in 2017. The falloff in support for the U.S. has been greatest among Congress party supporters. The decline in confidence in the U.S. president has been roughly comparable among both BJP and Congress adherents. At the same time, Indian assessment of Americans (56%) remains positive and largely unchanged since the last time this question was asked.

Indian views of the U.S. are comparable with those in Indonesia (48%) and Australia (48%), but far less favorable than those in Vietnam (84%) or the Philippines (78%). Indians' confidence in Trump is higher than that among Japanese (24%) or Indonesians (23%), but lower than among Filipinos (69%) or Vietnamese (58%).

There has been a similar, if less precipitate, decline in favorable public views of China. Indian opinion of China has soured by 15 points since 2015, with 26% expressing a favorable view in 2017. Indian confidence in Chinese President Xi Jinping is low (21%), down from 2015 but up from that in 2016. There is no significant partisan difference in views of either China or Xi.

1. Support for Prime Minister Modi remains strong

Prime Minister Narendra Modi became prime minister in 2014 in the wake of his Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) winning the Lok Sabha elections, the first time a single party achieved a majority in India's lower house since 1984.

Nearly nine-in-ten Indians (88%) hold a favorable view of Modi. This includes 69% who express a very favorable opinion. Although support dipped slightly in 2016, it has recovered 12 percentage points in 2017 and now rivals that immediately after his election. Just one-in-ten Indians have an unfavorable view of the prime minister.

Modi is very popular among men and women and among adults in both rural and urban areas. Young Indians, those ages 18 to 29, show slightly greater intensity of support than their elders, ages 50 and older. Perhaps not surprisingly, BJP supporters are more intense in their backing for their leader than are Congress party adherents. Almost everyone has an opinion about their prime minister; a scant 2% expressed no view.

No other major political figure in India approaches Modi's level of public support.

A majority of adults hold a favorable opinion of both Rahul Gandhi, who led the Congress party in the 2014 election, and his mother Sonia Gandhi, the president of the party. Sonia is the widow of former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Support for both Congress party leaders is up from 2013, but it is down 5 points for Rahul and 8 points for Sonia since 2016. Slightly less than half of BJP supporters voice a favorable view of Rahul (46%) and Sonia (45%). Both Gandhis are more popular in rural areas than in urban areas, reflecting the long ties the Congress party has had with Indians in the countryside. Indians with a primary school education or less are more likely than those with some college or more to hold a favorable view of either Gandhi.

Arvind Kejriwal is the chief minister of Delhi and the national convener of the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP). Kejriwal, who enjoyed widespread support in 2015 as he championed an anti-corruption agenda, has seen his backing fall 11 points since 2016 and 21 points since 2015. As of this year, roughly four-in-ten Indians (39%) see him in a favorable light.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Prime Minister Modi receives widespread public approval of his handling of a myriad of domestic challenges facing Indian society today.

Nearly three-quarters (73%) of Indian adults say a lack of employment opportunities is a very big problem in India. A comparable share of the public (72%) approves of the prime minister's handling of this issue, and that assessment is up 10 points since 2016.

A similar share of the public cites corrupt officials (74%) and terrorism (76%) as very big challenges, and roughly seven-in-ten Indians approve of Modi's record in dealing with each problem. Public approval of his handling of corruption is up 11 points and support for his dealings with terrorism is up 10 points. Rural Indians view the prime minister's handling of corruption less favorably than do city dwellers.

Reflecting the partisan divide over Modi's tenure, half or more of BJP supporters, in many cases very strong majorities of those partisans, approve of Modi's actions on a range of domestic problems. Roughly half or less, and in some cases an even smaller share, of Congress backers approve of Modi's performance on these same issues.

Modi's lowest ratings are for his handling of communal relations (50%) – the long fractious tensions between Muslims and Hindus and India's various castes – and for his efforts to curb air pollution (48%). Women are particularly critical of how he has dealt with communal relations, as are people living in northern India. And rural Indians are less supportive than those in urban areas of his handling of both communal relations and air pollution. But both of these issues are relatively low priorities for Indian adults.

Notably, Indians with a primary school education or less are more judgmental than those with some college in assessing Modi's dealings with various domestic problems. However, Indians with less education are also more likely than those with some college to hold no opinion on Modi's handling of these issues. They are also the least positive about his actions on communal violence and air pollution.

Modi's conduct of international affairs is less central to the public's day-to-day concerns. More than a third of those surveyed express no opinion about the prime minister's handling of relations with prominent players on the world stage. This is particularly the case in eastern India – where roughly half or more offer no opinion about this aspect of the Modi government.

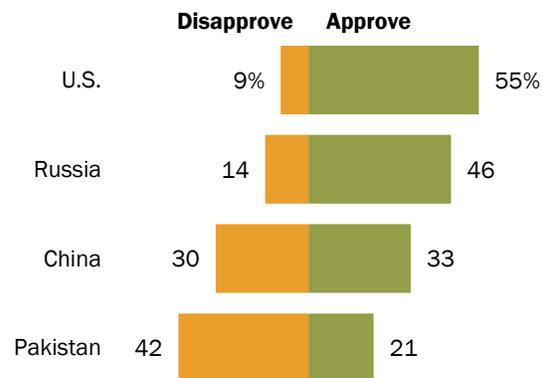

A majority (55%) approves of the prime minister's handling of relations with the United States and 36% hold no opinion on the matter. But this approval is down since 2015, when 66% said he was doing a good job in his dealings with Washington. Young Indians, those ages 18 to 29, are more supportive of Modi's conduct of Indo-American relations than those 50 and older. However, nearly half of older Indians, and roughly one-third of younger Indians, say they have no view on this aspect of Modi's performance.

Less than half of Indian adults approve of Modi's conduct of relations with Russia. Only a third rate the prime minister's management of relations with China positively. And approximately one-in-five Indians support Modi's dealings with Pakistan. None of these assessments have changed markedly in the past year. But nearly four-in-ten express no opinion on Modi's handling of relations with each of these three countries.

Indians with some college education are far more supportive than those with a primary school education or less of Modi's handling of relations with these other key countries. However, 45% or more of those with a primary education or less offer no opinion, compared with roughly 15% who have at least some college education. Similarly, men are more supportive than women, though more than 40% of the women surveyed voice no view.

Prime Minister Modi's party, the BJP, continues to enjoy widespread public support. More than eight-in-ten Indians have a favorable view of the party, roughly its level of backing for the past three years.

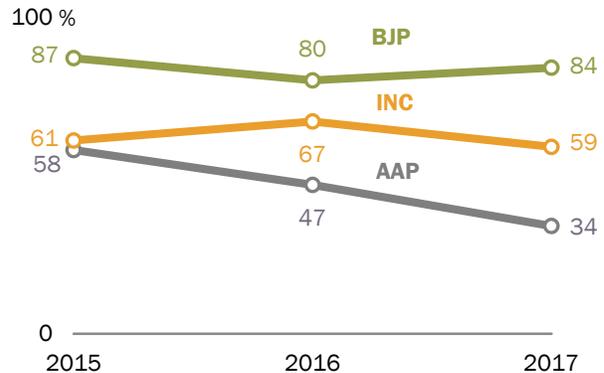

About six-in-ten Indians express a positive opinion of the Congress party. Again, this is fairly consistent with past support. But the gap between BJP and Congress backing, which was 26 points in 2015 and then narrowed to 13 points in 2016, has now widened again to 25 points. Indians in rural areas (63%) are more supportive of Congress than those in cities (51%). Those with a primary education or less are more likely to back Congress than are those with at least some college education.

Notably, 60% of Congress party supporters have a favorable view of the BJP. Just 45% of BJP backers hold a positive opinion of the Congress party. Neither party's supporters hold positive views of the AAP.

The public's opinion of the AAP continues to deteriorate. Just 34% hold a favorable view of the party, down 13 points from 2016 and 24 points from 2015.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

The public's support for major institutions in Indian society, especially the intensity of that backing, varies widely.

Indians overwhelmingly (86%) believe their national government has a good influence on the way things are going in the country. This includes 54% who say the central government in New Delhi has a very good influence. The intensity of such faith in the government is roughly comparable to what it was in 2015 (59%) but up significantly from the 29% who voiced a very good opinion in 2014.

Those who say economic conditions in India are good are much more likely than those who say they are bad to voice the view that the government has a good influence on the way things are going in India (92% to 55%).

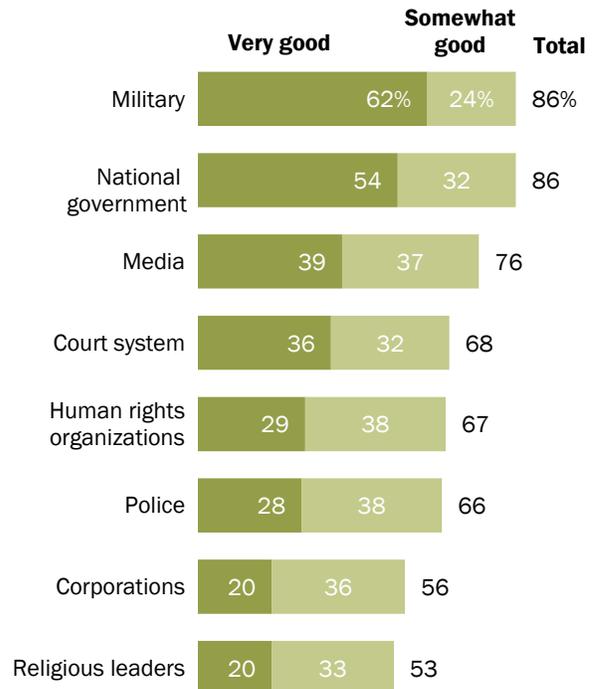

BJP supporters (64%) are much more likely than Congress party adherents (37%) to express the view that the national government has a very good influence. The intensity of faith in the government among those who identify with the BJP has not changed much since 2015, but Congress supporters show a marked decline in their support (down from 50% very good in 2015).

A comparable share of adults (86%) believe the military has a good influence, although the intensity of that support (62%) is even greater. Again, BJP supporters (63%) are more likely than Congress party backers (46%) to say the influence of the military is very good. Congress people are, however, almost twice as likely as BJP adherents to voice no opinion about the military.

Roughly three-quarters of the public (76%) says the media, such as television, radio, newspapers and online news, have a good influence on the way things are going in India. But such sentiment is far less intensely felt (39% very good) and is down 16 points from public views in 2015. BJP supporters (79%) are much more likely than Congress backers (59%) to say the media have a good influence, and Congress supporters are somewhat more likely to have no view.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Approximately two-thirds (68%) of adults believe the court system has a good influence. This faith in the courts is roughly split between very and somewhat strong. These views are largely unchanged from both 2014 and 2015. Today, young Indians (72%) are more likely than their elders (58%) to say the courts are a good influence, although 14% of the young and 17% of the older age group express no opinion.

A similar share, with similar degrees of intensity, holds the view that human rights organizations and the police are a good influence.

The weakest public support for an institution included in the survey is for religious leaders: Roughly half (53%) have a positive view of these leaders, with only 20% saying they are a very good influence.

Indians with a primary school education or less voice lower backing for all these Indian institutions than do those with some college, though less educated Indians are also more likely to express no opinion.

2. The state of Indian democracy

India is the world's largest democracy by population and democratic modes of governance enjoy widespread support there. But so do other types of nondemocratic governance.

About eight-in-ten (79%) in India are satisfied with the way their democracy is currently working. This includes 33% who are very satisfied. BJP supporters (84%) are significantly more satisfied with Indian democracy than are Congress backers (65%).

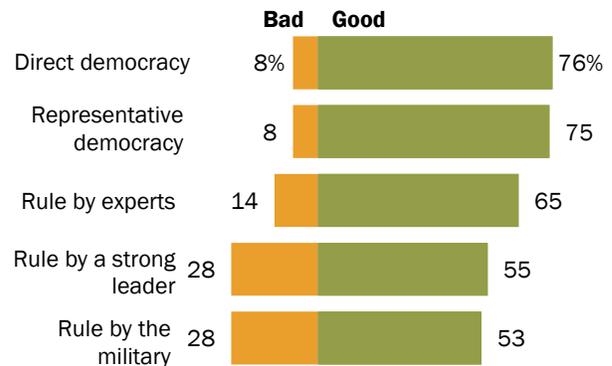

Views on the state of Indian democracy mirror public sentiment about the economy. Those who think economic conditions in India are good are much more likely than those who believe conditions are bad to be satisfied with Indian democracy (87% to 53%). Similarly, those who say today's children will be better off financially than their parents are more likely than those who are pessimistic about prospects for the next generation to be satisfied with democracy (85% to 70%).

Both direct and representative democracy enjoy public support. Three-quarters of Indians say a democratic system where representatives elected by citizens decide what becomes law would be a good way to govern their country. A similar share believes it would be good if citizens, not elected officials, voted directly on major national issues to decide what becomes law. In its 70 years of independence India has never held a national referendum, although there have been state-level plebiscites. (For more on views about democracy around the world, see Globally, Broad Support for Representative and Direct Democracy.)

Roughly two-thirds of Indians say a good way to govern the country would be experts, not elected officials, making decisions according to what they think is best for the nation. India is one of only seven countries among the 38 surveyed where more than six-in-ten support technocracy.

Half or more in India back autocratic and military rule

Would ___ be a good or bad way of governing India?

Note: Full question wordings for political systems: Representative democracy, "A democratic system where representatives elected by citizens decide what becomes law"; Direct democracy, "A democratic system where citizens, not elected officials, vote directly on major national issues to decide what becomes law"; Rule by experts, "Experts, not elected officials, make decisions according to what they think is best for the country"; Rule by a strong leader, "A system in which a strong leader can make decisions without interference from parliament or the courts"; Rule by the military, "The military rules the country."

Source: Spring 2017 Global Attitudes Survey. Q29a-e.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

A majority (55%) of Indians also back a governing system in which a strong leader can make decisions without interference from parliament or the courts, while 53% support military rule. Support for autocratic rule is higher in India than in any other nation surveyed. And India is one of only four nations where half or more of the public supports governing by the military.

BJP supporters and those who live in urban areas are significantly more likely than Congress party backers and those in rural regions to support rule by a strong leader, by the military and by experts. Rural respondents and Congress supporters are significantly more likely to offer no opinion, however. Those with some college education or more are significantly more likely than those with a primary education or less to back rule by experts, although those with less education are also more likely to not answer. In general, there are no major differences by gender and age.

3. Indians satisfied with country's direction but worry about crime, terrorism

Seven-in-ten Indians are satisfied with the way things are going in their country today, the highest such share Pew Research Center has recorded since 2013. This contentment is widespread between men and women and across political affiliations, age groups, income distributions and education levels.

The country has come a long way in the past half-century.

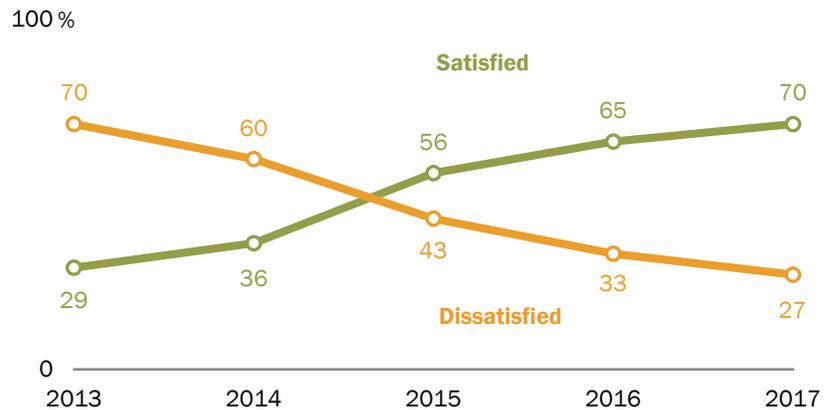

In 1966, India's per capita gross domestic product was $89. As of 2016, GDP per capita was $1,709, a nearly twentyfold increase. Over the same time period, life expectancy in India went up from 45 years to 68 years. Today about seven-in-ten (69%) say that life in India for people like them is better than it was 50 years ago. Only 17% say life is worse. Again, this positive view is widespread across a variety of demographic groups.

Despite a recent economic slowdown, Indians are upbeat about both current economic conditions and the future of their economy. More than eight-in-ten Indians (83%) say the nation's economy is good, and 30% say it is very good.

Supporters of the ruling BJP are even more satisfied with India's economy – 87% see the current economic situation as good. However, Congress party supporters are only slightly less positive, with 76% seeing India's economy as good.

Indians are also optimistic about their future economic situation: Roughly three-quarters (76%) believe that their children will be better off financially than their parents. Only 12% believe the next generation will be worse off, and such pessimism has fallen by 11 percentage points since 2013.

Indian views of the economy vary between regions. About nine-in-ten adults (91%) in the south are satisfied with the economy, compared with 79% in eastern states.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Despite their upbeat views on the current economy and rising optimism for the next generation, Indians are still concerned about several problems facing their nation. Crime takes the top spot on the list, with 84% of Indians seeing it as a very big problem.

Crime and terrorism have been perennial contenders for the top of the domestic problem list in Pew Research Center surveys of India. At least three-in-four Indians have cited crime and terrorism as very big problems in each year these issues were tested.

Despite periodic outbreaks of religious violence, relatively few Indians see communal relations as a very big problem. Similarly, despite Prime Minister Modi's decision last November to abolish high-value bank notes, less than half of the Indian population sees the lack of availability of cash to be a major problem.

Women and men view many issues similarly, but men are more worried about health care, a lack of employment opportunities and corrupt officials.

BJP supporters are more likely than Congress party supporters to see both corrupt officials (76% to 62%) and corrupt businesspeople (62% to 43%) as very big problems. BJP supporters also tend to worry more about poor quality schools, air pollution, health care and communal relations.

Indians living in cities are particularly sensitive to inequality: 72% see the gap between rich and poor as a major problem, compared with just 55% of rural Indians. Those living in urban areas are also more likely than those in rural areas to see corrupt businesspeople as a very big issue (72% vs. 52% respectively).

Those with more education are more likely to be concerned about corruption and inequality. For example, nine-in-ten Indians with at least some college education see corrupt officials as a very big problem, compared with 70% of those with a primary school education or less. The same applies for corrupt businesspeople (73% to 56%) and inequality (71% to 59%).

Again, regional differences play a role in perceptions of problems. More than nine-in-ten (93%) in the east say crime is a major problem, compared with 85% in the north, 78% in the west and 76% in the south. Indians from western states are less concerned about terrorism than other Indians (only 60% there see terrorism as a major problem).

For some problems, Indians are less concerned than they were last year. On communal relations, air pollution and health care, concern is down more than 10 percentage points. There have been smaller declines in concern about unemployment and corrupt officials.

4. India and the world

Amid steep declines in the image of the U.S. around the world, Indians remain relatively positive on America and its president. Roughly half (49%) have a favorable view of the U.S., while just 9% have an unfavorable view. Four-in-ten have confidence in President Donald Trump to do the right thing regarding world affairs, and only 16% do not trust him on the world stage.

Still, this year's ratings for the U.S. and its president are lower than in previous years. In the last year of President Barack Obama's administration, solid majorities held a favorable opinion of the U.S. (56%) and trusted Obama's approach to international affairs (58%). Obama and Modi forged a close relationship during Obama's tenure that was exemplified by their frequent visits, including Obama's 2015 trip to India for Republic Day.

Roughly half of BJP supporters (52%) are positive on the U.S., but only 36% of Congress party supporters agree. Congress backers, however, are more likely to express no opinion of the U.S. There is a similar pattern on confidence in Trump, with BJP supporters slightly more likely to say they trust the U.S. president on the world stage (44% vs. 33%) and Congress supporters more likely to offer no opinion.

When asked about Trump’s personal characteristics, nearly half of Indian adults voiced no view. But among Indians who had an opinion, most said that Trump is a strong leader (42% overall) and well-qualified to be president (41%). Indians were split on whether the new American president is dangerous, arrogant and someone who cares about ordinary people. On balance, those responding to the question tend to believe Trump is neither charismatic (29% vs. 22%) nor intolerant (32% vs. 17%).

These assessments stand in stark contrast to the negative ratings Trump receives in much of the world. Across 37 countries, people were most likely to say they think of Trump as “arrogant” (a global median of 75%), “intolerant” (65%) and “dangerous” (62%). (For more on international views of the U.S., see U.S. Image Suffers as Publics Around World Question Trump’s Leadership.)

When it comes to Trump’s policies, much of the Indian public offers no opinion. However, more Indians approve than disapprove of Trump’s plan to restrict immigration from select majority-Muslim countries (37% vs. 24%). BJP supporters (41%) are more likely than Congress backers (22%) to favor this policy.

There is also more approval than disapproval for a U.S. withdrawal from international climate change agreements (32% vs. 25%). (The survey was conducted before the Trump administration announced the U.S. was pulling out of the Paris climate accord.) Those who express an opinion on the U.S. withdrawing support for the Iran nuclear deal, building a wall on the Mexican border and pulling American support for international trade agreements tend to be divided on these issues.

Indians voice mixed opinions of other global powers and Asian counterparts. Longtime rival Pakistan receives extremely negative marks in India – 72% have an unfavorable view of their northwestern neighbor. While a smaller share (41%) dislikes China, negative views outrank positive by 15 percentage points, reflecting the increasingly tense relationship between the world's most populous countries. Russia fares about as well as the U.S., with 47% of Indians saying they see Russia in a positive light, and a slightly smaller share (42%) expresses warmth toward Japan, notwithstanding recent efforts by New Delhi and Tokyo to deepen economic ties.

Despite dip in image, U.S. remains more popular than China

Though the U.S. has lost some ground in India, it remains much more popular than China. Just 26% of the Indian public holds a positive view of Beijing compared with the 49% who see the U.S. in a favorable light. About four-in-ten (42%) believe the American government respects the personal freedoms of its people, but just 25% say the same about the Chinese government.

A plurality of Indians (42%) believe the U.S. is the world's leading economic power, a 9-percentage-point drop from last year. However, unlike people in many other nations around the world, Indians do not see China gaining ground on this measure: Only 11% of Indians see China as the world's top economy, a sentiment that is virtually unchanged since 2016.

While Indians are relatively confident in Trump's international leadership, those who express an opinion on Chinese President Xi Jinping's handling of foreign affairs are split. Only 21% express confidence in Xi while a similar 23% have no confidence. A majority (56%) offer no opinion of Xi's capacity to do the right thing on the world stage.

Many Indians see China's increasing power as a zero-sum game. Even before this summer's military standoff on the Indian-Chinese border in Doklam, a 56% majority in India said China's growing military power is bad for India. A similar 51% believe China's growing economy, with which India runs a trade deficit, does not bode well for their country.

Indians see ISIS as their top international threat

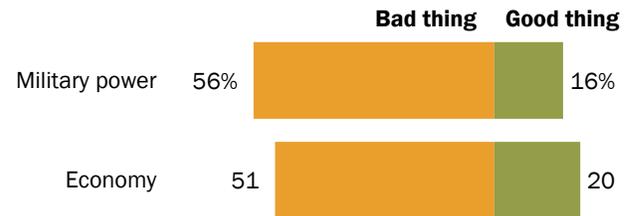

Roughly two-thirds (66%) of Indians believe ISIS poses a major threat to their country, easily outstripping concern about all other international issues tested. Indian concerns about the Islamic militant group are up 14 percentage points since 2016. During the survey fielding period this spring, ISIS carried out its first attack in India, injuring 10 train passengers in Madhya Pradesh.

About half of Indians feel very threatened by global climate change, while slightly fewer name China's power and influence and cyberattacks from other countries as major threats. About a third believe the large number of refugees leaving countries such as Iraq and Syria and the condition of the global economy are large concerns.

Relatively few people in India voice the view that American and Russian power are major threats to their country. In fact, 19% say U.S. power and influence pose no threat at all and 25% feel the same way about Russia, although more than a third express no opinion. By contrast, another key U.S. ally in the region – Japan – has starkly different views of the threat posed by Russia and the U.S. Roughly six-in-ten (62%) in Japan see American power as a major threat, while about four-in-ten (43%) feel this way about Russia.

Indians favor tough stance with Pakistan

While Indians have consistently given Pakistan negative ratings in Pew Research Center surveys, the extent of their disapproval has intensified in 2017. More than six-in-ten (64%) in India have a very unfavorable view of Pakistan today, up from 55% last year.

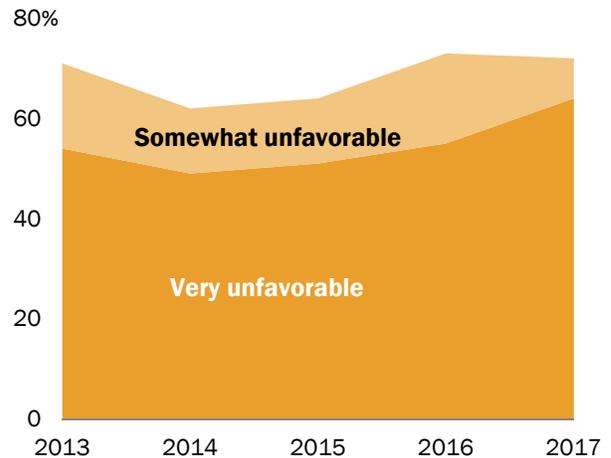

Disdain for Pakistan cuts across party lines – BJP and Congress party supporters express similar levels of negativity for India’s longtime foreign rival (70% vs. 63% very unfavorable).

However, those living in southern India, far from the India-Pakistan border, are decidedly less negative about Pakistan. Only 36% of those living in the south express a very unfavorable opinion of Pakistan, compared with 68% in the east, 69% in the north and 77% in the west. And in southern India 30% have a favorable view of Pakistan, versus just 6% in the north and east and 3% in the west.

When it comes to dealing with the disputed border regions of Jammu and Kashmir, the Indian public favors an aggressive stance. A 63% majority believes the government should be using more military force. Few say India should use less force or even the same amount as it is using now.

Methodological notes:

- Survey results are based on national samples. For further details on sample designs, see Methodology section and our international survey methods database.
- Due to rounding, percentages may not total 100%. The topline “total” columns show 100%, because they are based on unrounded numbers.
- Throughout this report, trends from India in 2013 refer to a survey conducted between December 7, 2013, and January 12, 2014 (Winter 2013-2014).
- For some countries, trends for certain years are omitted due to differences in sample design or population coverage. Omitted trends often reflect less representative samples than more recent surveys in the same countries. Trends that are omitted include:
  - India prior to Winter 2013-2014
- Not all questions included in the Spring 2017 survey are presented in this topline. Omitted questions have either been previously released or will be released in future reports.
