Pew Research Center
Spring 2024 Global Attitudes Survey
March 26, 2025 Release

Methodological notes:

- Not all questions included in the Spring 2024 Global Attitudes Survey are presented in this Topline. Omitted questions have either been previously released or will be released in future reports.
- Survey results are based on a national sample of Israelis. For further details on sample designs, refer to the “How we did this” section and our international survey methods database.

This Topline has tables showing results for current and childhood religious identity among Jews in Israel (n=591). Respondents were first asked about their current religious identity. Those who indicated they are Jewish were then asked what specific religious group within Judaism they identify with. Afterward, respondents were asked about their childhood religious identity, and those who indicated they had been raised Jewish were asked a follow-up question about the religious group within Judaism they had been raised in.

- Four respondents said their current religion is “Jewish” but were raised in another religion. They are coded as “Something else/Don’t know/Refused” on the childhood Jewish group question.
- One respondent said their childhood religion was “Jewish,” but their current religion is something else. They are excluded from this analysis of Israel’s current Jewish population.

For information on the broader religious composition of Israel, refer to the Topline of our related report, “Around the World, Many People Are Leaving Their Childhood Religions.”
