Little Interest in Libya, European Debt Crisis Public Closely Tracking Economic and Political News

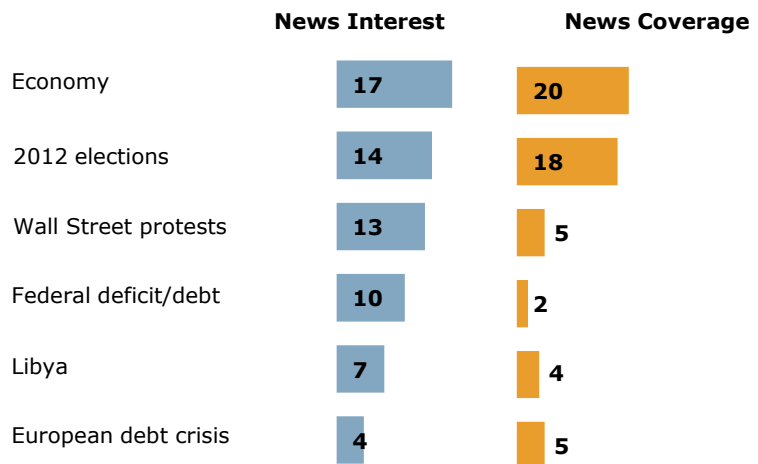

A combination of intertwined economic and political stories topped the public's news interest last week.

No single story dominated Americans' attention. Nearly two-in-ten (17%) say reports about the condition of the economy was their top story, while 14% cite news about the candidates for president in 2012 as the story they followed most closely.

Another 13% cite the anti-Wall Street protests in New York and other cities, while 10% cite the discussions in Washington about how to address the federal budget deficit and the national debt.

According to the latest weekly News Interest Index survey, conducted Oct. 27-30 among 1,002 adults by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press, fewer say their top story was either the events unfolding in Libya (7%) or efforts by European nations to deal with the debt crisis in Greece (4%), another major economic story.

News Interest Vs. News Coverage

News interest shows the percentage of people who say they followed this story most closely, Pew Research Center for the People & the Press, Oct. 27-30, 2011. News coverage shows the percentage of news coverage devoted to each story, Pew Research Center's Project for Excellence in Journalism, Oct. 24-30, 2011.

News about the economy and the 2012 campaign also topped coverage, according to a separate analysis by the Pew Research Center's Project for Excellence in Journalism (PEJ). In total, economic news accounted for about a quarter of coverage. General news about the economy accounted for 20%, news about the Occupy Wall Street protests made up 5% and news about the ongoing deficit and debt discussions in Washington accounted for another 2%. News about the 2012 campaign – highlighted in part by competing economic proposals by the Republican candidates – accounted for 18% of coverage.

Differing Partisan Takes on the Week's Top Stories

About four-in-ten (38%) say they followed reports about the condition of the U.S. economy very closely last week. That is unchanged from one week earlier and consistent with strong interest in economic news throughout this year, first as the recovery struggled to take hold and then when it became clear the recovery had stalled. By this measure, partisans show comparable levels of interest: 42% of Democrats, 37% of Republicans and 37% of independents say they followed news about the economy very closely.

Overall, about two-in-ten (21%) say they very closely followed news about the candidates for the 2012 presidential elections, matching the number that said this the previous week. With most of the news at this point about the fight for the GOP nomination, more Republicans say they are following campaign news very closely than Democrats (29% vs. 19%). Two-in-ten independents (20%) say they followed election news very closely.

The partisan divide is larger when people are asked which story they followed most closely. A quarter of Republicans (25%) – more than for any other story – say this was their top news of the week. Another 17% say the economy was the story they followed most closely. This marks the third week in a row that the campaign has been the top story for Republicans.

About as many Democrats (19%) as Republicans say the economy was their top story, but just 10% say they followed election news most closely.

More Reps Track Elections, More Dems Track Wall Street Protests

Democrats show greater interest than Republicans in the anti-Wall Street protests in New York and other cities. Nearly two-in-ten Democrats (17%) say news about the protests was their top story, compared with 8% of Republicans. Independents fall in between (13%).

Overall, 19% of the public say they followed the protests very closely, matching the number that said this one week earlier. Slightly more Democrats say this than Republicans (21% vs. 14%). News about the protests – which last week included confrontations with police in Oakland and Atlanta – accounted for 5% of the newshole. That’s down from the week of Oct. 10-16, when the story accounted for 10% of coverage.

Democrats also are more likely than Republicans to say their top story last week was the debt and deficit deliberations in Washington; 15% of Democrats say this was the news they followed most closely, compared with 6% of Republicans. One-in-ten independents (10%) say this as well. However, partisans are about equally likely to say they followed this news very closely (28% of Republicans, 27% of Democrats and 24% of independents).

News Interest

% following each story very closely

Which one story did you follow most closely?

PEW RESEARCH CENTER Oct. 27-30, 2011.

The top foreign stories attracted less interest. Overall, 7% say their top story was the situation in Libya after the death of that country’s ousted leader, Moammar Gadhafi; 14% say they followed this news very closely. On both measures, there is little difference among partisans. News about Libya accounted for 4% of coverage, down sharply from 17% one week earlier when Gadhafi was captured and killed.

Interest in the ongoing financial crisis in Europe remains limited. Just 4% say the efforts to deal with the debt crisis in Greece and other European countries was their top story; 12% say they followed this news very closely. Partisans showed comparable interest on both measures. News about the debt crisis accounted for 5% of coverage.

These findings are based on the most recent installment of the weekly News Interest Index, an ongoing project of the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press. The index, building on the Center's longstanding research into public attentiveness to major news stories, examines news interest as it relates to the news media's coverage. The weekly survey is conducted in conjunction with The Project for Excellence in Journalism's News Coverage Index, which monitors the news reported by major newspaper, television, radio and online news outlets on an ongoing basis. In the most recent week, data relating to news coverage were collected Oct. 24-30, and survey data measuring public interest in the top news stories of the week were collected Oct. 27-30 from a nationally representative sample of 1,002 adults.

About the News Interest Index

The News Interest Index is a weekly survey conducted by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press aimed at gauging the public's interest in and reaction to major news events. This project has been undertaken in conjunction with the Project for Excellence in Journalism's News Coverage Index, an ongoing content analysis of the news. The News Coverage Index catalogues the news from top news organizations across five major sectors of the media: newspapers, network television, cable television, radio and the internet. Each week (from Monday through Sunday) PEJ compiles this data to identify the top stories for the week. (For more information about the Project for Excellence in Journalism's News Coverage Index, go to www.journalism.org.) The News Interest Index survey collects data from Thursday through Sunday to gauge public interest in the most covered stories of the week.

Results for this survey are based on telephone interviews conducted Oct. 27-30, 2011, among a national sample of 1,002 adults 18 years of age or older living in the continental United States (617 respondents were interviewed on a landline telephone, and 385 were interviewed on a cell phone, including 165 who had no landline telephone). The survey was conducted by interviewers at Princeton Data Source under the direction of Princeton Survey Research Associates International. A combination of landline and cell phone random digit dial samples were used; both samples were provided by Survey Sampling International. Interviews were conducted in English. Respondents in the landline sample were selected by randomly asking for the youngest adult male or female who is now at home. Interviews in the cell sample were conducted with the person who answered the phone, if that person was an adult 18 years of age or older.

The combined landline and cell phone sample are weighted using an iterative technique that matches gender, age, education, race, Hispanic origin, region, and population density to parameters from the March 2010 Census Bureau's Current Population Survey. The sample is also weighted to match current patterns of telephone status based on extrapolations from the 2010 National Health Interview Survey. The weighting procedure also accounts for the fact that respondents with both landline and cell phones have a greater probability of being included in the combined sample and adjusts for household size within the landline sample. Sampling errors and statistical tests of significance take into account the effect of weighting. The following table shows the sample sizes and the error attributable to sampling that would be expected at the 95% level of confidence for different groups in the survey:

Group	Sample Size	Plus or minus ...
Total sample	1,002	4.0 percentage points
Republicans	273	7.5 percentage points
Democrats	334	6.5 percentage points
Independents	338	6.5 percentage points

Sample sizes and sampling errors for other subgroups are available upon request.

In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.
